

Table of Contents

PREFACE	7
I. INTRODUCTION	11
I.1. Totalitarianism and the question of community in political philosophy	12
I.2. The Russian Orthodox spiritual and intellectual tradition	16
I.3. The modernity of Europe	24
I.3.1. Modernization as a process	24
I.3.2. Modernity as a condition	27
I.4. Intellectual traditions: A note on methodology	33
II. THE INTERPRETATIVE SPACE OF POLITICAL MODERNITY: OUTLINES	37
II.1. The political problematic of modernity	38
II.1.1. Freedom and reason	38
II.1.2. The concept of community in political philosophy	43
II.2. The experience of totalitarianism and its impact on rival interpretations of community in contemporary political philosophy	47
II.2.1. The liberal approach: theorizing the polity	48
II.2.2. The communitarian approach: theorizing community	55
II.2.3. The postmodern approach: theorizing the human subject	65
II.3. The contours of the interpretative space of political modernity	70
III. TRADITION UNDER CONDITIONS OF MODERNITY: RUSSIAN ORTHODOXY	73
III.1. Setting up the past: From Byzantine theology to Russian religious philosophy	74
III.1.1. Patristic terminology	74
III.1.2. Russian Orthodoxy and religious philosophy	79
III.1.3. The breaking-point of 1917	85

III.2. Confronting modernity: The Orthodox intellectual tradition in the twentieth century	93
III.2.1. The theological debates in emigration	94
III.2.2. Orthodox thought in the Soviet period and in post-communist Russia	104
III.2.2.a. Continuity from within: Aleksej Losev and Sergej Averincev	105
III.2.2.b. New impulses: Neo-Palamism and contemporary Western philosophy	110
III.2.2.c. The Russian Orthodox Church	120
III.2.3. An additional perspective: Orthodox theology and religious philosophy in Greece	126
III.3. Mapping contemporary Orthodox thought	131
 IV. THE INTERPRETATIVE SPACE OF POLITICAL MODERNITY: CONTINGENCIES AND ALTERNATIVES	 135
IV.1. A new anthropology: Sergej Khoruzhij's search for an alternative to the Cartesian subject	137
IV.2. Freedom and relatedness: Christos Yannaras' reflections on Heidegger	151
IV.3. Jean-Luc Nancy, Alasdair MacIntyre and the radicalization of postmodernism and communitarianism	162
IV.4. Conclusion on the exploration of alternatives and contingencies in the interpretative space of political modernity	173
 V. EPILOGUE: THREE ELEMENTS FOR A POST-TOTALITARIAN PHILOSOPHY OF COMMUNITY	 177
 NOTE ON TRANSLITERATION AND TRANSLATION	 181
 BIBLIOGRAPHY	 183