

Contents

1	Introduction	1
2	Gauging The Stakes of Multilateral Trade Negotiations	11
2.1	Sources of Gain: A brief compendium	13
2.1.1	Traditional theories based on differing productivities and factor endowments	13
2.1.2	Newer trade theories	16
2.2	Is trade liberalization subject to diminishing returns ?	17
2.2.1	How far has globalization gone ?	19
2.2.2	What are the impediments to exploiting the gains from trade ?	22
2.2.2.1	Average tariffs, tariff peaks, and tariff escalation	22
2.2.2.2	Non-tariff barriers to trade abound	25
2.3	Comparative analysis of the welfare costs of protective measures	26
2.4	Estimations of the potential gains from liberalizing trade	29
2.4.1	The trade-enabling role of services	33
2.4.2	Disproportionate gains associated with liberalization of trade in agriculture	34
2.4.3	Considering technological spillovers and trade-induced productivity gains	35
2.4.4	Considering rent-seeking costs	37
2.4.5	Projections on poverty alleviation	38
2.4.6	Reflections on trade, stability and peace	39
2.4.7	Costs of liberalization	40
2.5	The bicycle theorem or nonlinearity increases in the returns to liberalization	42
3	Rationalizing trade policy and trade agreements	45
3.1	On the political economy of trade protection	46
3.1.1	Trade policy preferences – a common base of political economy models	47
3.1.2	A typology of models	50
3.1.2.1	Trade policy in a direct democracy setting	50
3.1.2.2	Trade policy in a representative democracy setting	51
3.1.3	Models' implications and empirical resonance	62
3.1.4	Upshot: Economic and political efficiency divided by common assumptions	65
3.2	On the political economy of trade liberalization	66

3.2.1	Structural biases against liberalization	67
3.2.2	Models of endogenous liberalization	72
3.2.3	A landmark in liberalization – the Repeal of the Corn laws of 1846	80
3.2.3.1	Change in the median voter's identity	81
3.2.3.2	Change in the preferences of the political leader	82
3.2.3.3	Sectoral attrition	83
3.2.3.4	Portfolio diversification / Evolving capital markets	83
3.2.3.5	Strengthened pro-liberalization lobbying	84
3.2.3.6	Crisis	86
3.2.4	Upshot: wanted – helping hand, invisible or apparent	86
3.3	On the purpose of trade agreements	87
3.3.1	Trade agreements as a remedy against a terms-of-trade-driven prisoners' dilemma	89
3.3.2	Trade agreements to internalize international political externalities	94
3.3.2.1	Alternative rationales for trade agreements: the political-economy-driven prisoners' dilemma	95
3.3.2.2	Negotiations and agreements as ways out of political dilemmas – a heuristic tale	100
3.3.3	Trade agreements as commitment devices	106
3.3.3.1	A contractarian explanation	106
3.3.3.2	Strategic explanations – why assuming obligations and burning bridges may make sense	108
3.3.3.3	An institutional economics perspective: Trade agreements as solutions to hold-up problems	112
3.3.4	Time for a synthesis?	113
3.3.5	What do negotiators have on mind? Some notes on the empirics of trade negotiations	119
3.3.6	All diplomats' economics? Making sense of reciprocity	124
3.3.6.1	The welfare economics case for reciprocity	124
3.3.6.2	The (positive) constitutional economics case for reciprocity	125
3.3.6.3	The evolutionary economics case for reciprocity	127
3.3.7	Multilateral trade agreements as public goods? A tale of rational pigs . .	133
4	Principal liberalization tracks and a unifying framework	143
4.1	The interaction between liberalization tracks	143
4.2	A common lense: the two-level-game perspective	151
5	Strategic levers for the domestic level	163
5.1	The Transparency Approach	164
5.1.1	Raising transparency – the general mechanism	164
5.1.2	Transparency as a way out of optimally obfuscated policies?	167
5.1.2.1	A simple model	172

5.1.2.2	Delineating "windows of opportunity"	174
5.1.3	The Australian experience	181
5.2	The Delegation Approach	190
5.2.1	Delegation of competence – the general mechanism	191
5.2.2	The American experience	192
5.2.3	Formalizing the argument	195
5.2.3.1	The delegation strategy as a remedy against parochial protectionism and universal logroll	195
5.2.3.2	The delegation strategy as a cure to strategic delegation	204
5.2.4	The upshot: (political) institutions matter	208
5.3	The Compensation Approach	210
5.3.1	Compensating the losers – the general mechanism	211
5.3.1.1	Normative caveats against compensating the losers	212
5.3.1.2	Economic problems with compensating the losers	214
5.3.1.3	Political economy problems with compensating the losers	215
5.3.1.4	Practical examples of compensating the losers	215
5.3.1.5	Identifying the broad trade-offs	216
5.3.2	Theorizing compensation in the context of endogenous protection	217
5.3.2.1	Trade adjustment assistance in a referendum context	218
5.3.2.2	Trade adjustment assistance in a lobbying context	225
5.3.2.3	The missing link: compensation in a negotiating context	229
5.3.3	Addressing the missing link: Trade negotiations and domestic compensation – first image reversed?	230
5.3.3.1	The economic backbone	231
5.3.3.2	The political game	234
5.3.3.3	Domestic division and the Schelling conjecture	238
5.3.3.4	Domestic compensation – the case of a trade adjustment program	244
5.3.3.5	Effects on the outcome of negotiations	245
5.3.4	Incentive-compatibility of compensation revisited	252
6	Strategic levers for the multilateral level	255
6.1	On the scope of negotiations	257
6.1.1	What should trade negotiations be about?	258
6.1.2	Linking issues – the general mechanism	262
6.1.2.1	Issue linkage potential in trade negotiations: a qualitative approach	267
6.1.2.2	The level II effects of level I issue-linkage: a simple model	268
6.1.3	The Uruguayan experience	271
6.1.4	What theory tells	274
6.1.5	The Single Undertaking – a singular undertaking?	282

6.1.6	A proposal to bridge the continental divide	298
6.2	On the mechanics of negotiation	305
6.2.1	The origins and benefits of formalized negotiation procedures	306
6.2.2	NAMA modalities: Swiss cheese, no holes – ready to serve?	313
6.2.3	Agriculture modalities: from unlucky blends to tiering tiers	320
6.2.4	Services modalities: anything on offer beyond requests and offers?	323
6.2.5	Upshot: Mechanics matter	328
6.3	Taking compensation to higher levels: the Aid-for-Trade approach	329
6.3.1	Origins and scope of a still fuzzy concept	331
6.3.2	Some thoughts on Aid-for-Trade, fairness and reciprocity	334
6.3.3	Is there an efficiency case for Aid-for-Trade?	339
6.3.4	A macroeconomic perspective on Aid-for-Trade	342
6.3.5	Aid-for-trade viewed through the political economy lense	345
6.3.6	Upshot: a charming concept but several questions left open	351
7	Pooling insights	355
8	Appendix I	359
9	Appendix II	379