

Table of Contents

Table of figures	13
List of abbreviations	15
1. Preface	19
1.1 Profiles matter: the political and scientific relevance of the study of candidate selection	19
1.2 Literature review: trends, gaps and state of the art	24
1.3 Research questions and theoretical setting	29
1.4 Structure of the research	31
2. Preparing the ground: concepts and theories	33
2.1 Legitimacy and the President of the European Commission: why bother?	33
2.2 Intrainstitutional dynamics at work: interactions between the governments and within the European Parliament re-examined	38
2.2.1 Dynamics at the intergovernmental level: 28 stages of decision-making	38
2.2.2 Parliamentary dynamics in and beyond the nation state: party or partisan politics?	49
2.3 Executive-Legislative relations: the triangle of national governments, Parliament and European Commission and the interinstitutional game	52
2.4 Conclusion: Insights from the conceptual delineation	56
2.5 Theoretical approaches	57
2.5.1 Rationalist approaches	57
2.5.1.1 Liberal Intergovernmentalism and European integration	57
2.5.1.2 Rational choice institutionalism	64
2.5.1.3 Hypotheses from rationalist theory	66
2.5.2 Supranationalist approaches	68
2.5.2.1 Federalism	68
2.5.2.2 Historical institutionalism	72
2.5.2.3 Hypotheses from supranationalist theory	74

III. Methodology	77
3.1 The quantitative framework	79
3.2 The qualitative framework	80
3.3 Sources	81
4. The institutions guiding the appointment of the European Commission: mapping the intervening variables	83
4.1 The constitutional framework for appointing the Commission President	83
4.1.1 The Appointment of the Commission President and the treaties	83
4.1.2 The European Parliament and its rules of procedure: filling the gaps of incomplete contracting	94
4.2 Widening the circle of actors: enlargement and the appointment of the Commission President	102
5. The investiture of the European Commission in perspective: preferences and profiles	107
5.1 The profile of the Commission President: which kind of leader?	107
5.1.1 Deconstructing the procedure: the “wish list” of the governments	107
5.1.2 Preferences of the European Parliament: different, not so different?	110
5.2 Patterns of change? The role of nationality and ideology in the appointment of the Commission President	114
5.2.1 Nationality and the Commission Presidency: institutionalized rules at work?	114
5.2.2 Nationality and the Commission Presidencies revisited: the role of interinstitutional balances	118
5.2.3 Party affiliation and the Commission Presidency: patterns over time?	123
5.2.4 The role of time: The reappointment of the Commission President	124
5.2.5 The profile of the Commission President revisited: lessons from experience	126
5.2.6 Summing up: patterns in the appointment of the Commission President	136
5.3 European Parliament and Council Presidency: which roles in the appointment?	137

5.3.1	The influence of the European Parliament: independent or intervening variable?	137
5.3.2	The role of the Council Presidency: An important player in institutional terms	143
5.3.3	Summing up: European Parliament and Council and their respective roles	146
6.	The appointment of the Commission Presidents revisited	148
6.1	The Presidency of Walter Hallstein: inventing the Commission	148
6.2	The Rey Commission: the first Commission of the merged Communities	154
6.3	Italy at last: the Presidency of Franco Malfatti	160
6.4	The Presidency of Sicco Mansholt: the conclusion of a career	164
6.5	The Presidency of François-Xavier Ortoli: the Community of the Nine	168
6.6	The appointment of Roy Jenkins	171
6.7	The Presidency of Gaston Thorn: Luxembourg's turn	174
6.8	The era of Jacques Delors	177
6.9	The Presidency of Jacques Santer: The British veto	182
6.10	The Presidency of Romano Prodi: timely crisis management	190
6.11	The Presidency of José Barroso: bringing party politics in	194
6.12	Conclusion: a pattern behind the appointment?	199
6.12.1	Patterns in the choice of the Commission President: (institutionalist) logic or accidental choice?	199
6.12.2	The impact of treaty change and enlargement: structuring the appointment process and identifying periodizations	208
6.12.3	Towards which system of governance? Comparative views on the appointment of the Commission President	209
7.	Conclusion	214
8.	Bibliography	227

Annex	249
1. Treaty provisions on the appointment of the Commission President	249
2. Rules of procedure of the European Parliament on the appointment of the Commission President	253
3. Heads of state/government at the time of a new appointment of a Commission President	256
4. Composition of member states' governments at the time of a new appointment of a Commission President	257
5. Political orientations of member states' governments at the time of a new appointment of a Commission President	260