

Content

List of Abbreviations	11
List of Tables and Figures	13
I. Introduction	19
1.1 Estrangement or business as usual in Italo-German relations?	19
1.2 State of the Art – Bilateral relations meet foreign policy research	22
1.2.1 Italian foreign policy after the cold war	22
1.2.1.1 From the first to the second republic	24
1.2.1.2 Domestic politics, bipartisanship, and Berlusconi	27
1.2.2 German foreign policy after the cold war	31
1.2.2.1 From Bonn to Berlin	32
1.2.2.2 New challenges, bad performance	36
1.2.3 Bilateral relations in international politics	38
1.2.3.1 Italo-German relations	38
1.2.3.2 Bilateral relations in IR and FPA research	40
1.2.3.3 The enduring relevance of bilateral relations	42
1.3 Research questions and structure	45
II. Theory	47
2.1 A framework to study bilateral relations	47
2.1.1 Bilateral relations as ‘microstructure’	47
2.1.2 Types of bilateral images	51
2.1.3 Dimensions of bilateral images	54
2.1.3.1 Patterns of interaction	56
2.1.3.2 Framing of interests	59
2.1.3.3 Images of Self and Other	61
2.2 A framework to study foreign policy change	68
2.2.1 The existence of change	69
2.2.2 Different layers of change	71
2.2.3 The constitution of change	72
2.3 Synthesis: My framework of analysis	73

III. Research Design and Methods	75
3.1 Research design	75
3.1.1 Comparative case studies of bilateral relations	75
3.1.2 Case selection	76
3.2 Data	81
3.2.1 Newspaper coverage	82
3.2.2 Government publications	86
3.2.3 Expert interviews	87
3.3 Techniques of analysis	89
3.3.1 Historical analysis	90
3.3.2 Qualitative content analysis	91
IV. Bilateral Incidents – Two gaffes and their settlement	97
4.1 The Andreotti incident in 1984	98
4.1.1 Andreotti and the ‘threat of pan-Germanism’	98
4.1.2 Conceding interaction	103
4.1.3 Solidary interests	108
4.1.4 Common identities	114
4.1.5 Results: A bilateral image of ‘friendship’	122
4.2 The Berlusconi incident in 2003	124
4.2.1 Berlusconi and the ‘Nazi camp guard’	124
4.2.2 Compromising interaction	131
4.2.3 Egoistic interests	137
4.2.4 Compatible identities	144
4.2.5 Results: A bilateral image of ‘collaboration’	152
4.3 From Andreotti to Berlusconi: Comparison of results	154
V. Status Conflicts – G7 and UN Security Council membership	157
5.1 The struggles for G7 membership	159
5.1.1 Italo-German conflicts over G7 establishment in 1975 and 1986	159
5.1.2 From conceding to compromising interaction	174
5.1.3 Solidary interests	180
5.1.4 Common identities	186
5.1.5 Results: A bilateral image of ‘friendship’	194
5.2 The struggles for UN Security Council reform	195
5.2.1 Italo-German conflicts over SC reform in 1997/8 and 2004/5	196
5.2.2 Insisting interaction	210
5.2.3 Egoistic interests	218
5.2.4 Compatible identities	225

5.2.5 Results: A bilateral image of ‘collaboration’	236
5.3 From G7 to the Security Council: Comparison of results	238
 VI. European Politics – Two enlargement negotiations	 241
6.1 The European Community’s Southern enlargement	243
6.1.1 Italo-German conflicts in the negotiation of Southern enlargement	243
6.1.2 Conceding interaction	254
6.1.3 Solidary interests	260
6.1.4 Common identities	266
6.1.5 Results: A bilateral image of ‘friendship’	278
6.2 The European Union’s Eastern enlargement	279
6.2.1 Italo-German conflicts in the negotiation of Eastern enlargement	280
6.2.2 Compromising interaction	295
6.2.3 Egoistic interests	301
6.2.4 Common identities	307
6.2.5 Results: A bilateral image of ‘collaboration’	319
6.3 From Southern to Eastern enlargement: Comparison of results	321
 VII. Conclusion	 324
7.1 Summary of results: Changes in Italo-German relations	324
7.1.1 Comparison over time	324
7.1.2 Comparison by dimensions	326
7.1.3 Comparison by settings	335
7.2 Theoretical and empirical contributions	339
7.2.1 Italian foreign policy	340
7.2.2 German foreign policy	341
7.2.3 Bilateral relations in international politics	341
7.2.4 The surplus of constructivist bilateral relations research	343
7.3 Outlook: Prospects for Italo-German relations	345
 Bibliography	 347
List of Interview Partners	375